ABSTRACT

This paper investigates the connectedness of Artificial intelligence stocks with agri-commodity stocks during COVID-19 and Russia-Ukraine invasion. To measure the Artificial intelligence stocks, we consider Microsoft, Google, Amazon, Meta and NVIDIA while US wheat, US corn, US soyabean, US oats and US Rice are proxied to represent the agri-commodity stocks. The daily closing price of these stocks is taken from December 31, 2019 to February 23, 2022 (COVID-19 and February 24, 2022 to August 10, 2022 (Russia-Ukraine Invasion)). For an empirical estimation, Diebold & Yilmaz (2012) and Barunik & Krehlik (2018) models are employed to investigate the connectedness among these assets class. The result reveals that Microsoft is highest receiver as well as highest contributor of the shocks; US rice and US corn are least receiver and contributor of the stocks respectively during COVID-19 period.

1. Introduction

The interconnectedness of the world's asset markets has increased, especially during the past few decades due to rise in the levels of worldwide market integration and the exploration for substitute investment assets in response to market dangers. Understanding the cross-sector linkages and information spillover can benefit in policy formulation, macroeconomic research, and portfolio management. This research on linkages assists policymakers in identifying areas that are leading or lagging in growth which is extremely crucial particularly, for emerging market economies. Market linkages indicate that two markets are interrelated and are not separate. As a result, everything occurs in one market has an impact on the other; increased linkages have an impact on global economies and watch various market linkages in order to make the best possible transactions. Investors and other market participants constantly making it difficult for portfolio investors to understand the trends in different markets. Consequently, it is vital to observe the linkages

ABSTRACT

This paper investigates the impact of financial development on economic growth in India, a major emerging economy. We estimate more flexible models than typically found to capture potentially asymmetric relationships while accounting for trade openness, foreign direct investment, and technological development. We document a cointegrating and asymmetric relationship between the key variables using nonlinear and standard autoregressive distributed lag models. We find a consistently negative impact of financial development and foreign inflows on economic growth in India in the long and short run, while trade liberalization and technological development have positive effects. Our findings, therefore, suggest caution regarding financial market liberalization in India.

1. Introduction

Countries benefit from having advanced financial systems that help them generate higher economic growth and lower poverty (Beck, Levine, & Loayza, 2000; Demirgüç-Kunt & Levine, 2008); a well-developed financial infrastructure boosts economic progress by facilitating savings and investment (Le Roux & Moyo, 2015), helping to build capital and increase worker productivity. Financial development can encourage economic progress by increasing competition between firms and promoting innovation and economic
